Carla and Pete look at some valuable stamps and old coins in a small shop. Pete does not buy any coins, but he wants them. Later, the shopkeeper finds them outside. 'You've got my coins!' he says. But he's wrong. The girl, Tracy, takes the coins and puts them in her friend's pocket. He plays his flute near the shop door. Tourists don't think the flutes are valuable. But Carla understands and she speaks to a policeman. He takes the stamps from the flute player, and the shopkeeper is happy.
